Mary founded and leads the firm's Privacy & Cybersecurity group with the primary goal of helping companies launch and grow their businesses while staying in compliance with the complex regulations governing the collection and commercial use of personal information.

Access to data is critical to the growth of many kinds of businesses; however, its misuse can expose companies, executives, and employees to serious liability. Mary collaborates with teams across the firm ranging from Investment Management to White Collar Criminal Defense and Insurance Recovery to counsel clients across the wide range of industries where data privacy issues arise.

Her commitment to learning the intricacies of each client's business enables her to anticipate and mitigate risk as privacy and cyber laws quickly evolve on the state, federal, and international level. She is a recognized authority on EU and U.S. data privacy and information security laws, including the California Consumer Privacy Act (CCPA) and the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR), in addition to industry-specific requirements such as the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPPA), and the Children's Online Privacy Protection Act (COPPA).

Mary's extensive experience in intellectual property enhances her ability to understand the technology and data challenges companies face today. For more than 30 years, clients have turned to her as a trusted advisor; she has successfully guided business leaders and general counsel through difficult decisions and hundreds of sophisticated tech/data deals from concept to closing. She regularly serves as lead counsel to both public and private companies in complex commercial matters, helping clients commercialize, protect, and manage their intellectual property, technology, and database assets around the world; she also counsels startups on the transactions and foundational legal structures needed to launch their businesses.

A highly regarded "top-notch," "hugely responsive," and "skilled, bright and knowledgeable" practitioner, Mary has been consistently recognized by Chambers USA (2009-2020) for her successful handling of complex transactions involving significant IP assets. Her clients commend her as "a phenomenal client manager" who gives "useful, pragmatic, practical advice."

In the Media

- > January 15, 2021
Mary J. Hildebrand CIPP/US/E talks to Law360 about increasing state and federal regulation of the collection and use of biometric data such as facial scans and fingerprints. She says, "The FTC's proposed settlement [with Ever, a defunct photo storage app that allegedly deceived consumers about its use of facial recognition technology] and the proposed New York law lead me to the conclusion that we will continue to see a proliferation of biometric privacy laws. It's an issue that cuts across geographies and demographics."

Mary J. Hildebrand CIPP/US/E tells Reuters that Nike's workout apps are a source of valuable information about customers; she notes that the data they provide give the company a "significant advantage" over rivals. She states, "[Nike] likely has several scientists using the data to see if shoppers will tolerate higher prices." The Reuters article was reprinted in Yahoo! Finance, Nasdaq, City A.M., América Retail, and the New York Post.

Mary J. Hildebrand CIPP/US/E speaks to Compliance Week about the FTC's request for information from nine social media companies and streaming services, including Amazon.com, Facebook, and YouTube, concerning their collection, use, and sale of users' personal information and the impact of those practices on children and teens. "I think this inquiry is long overdue," she says. "And I doubt it will be the last one. I'm hoping the information they collect might inform a national data privacy law." Hildebrand warns companies working with the nine organizations singled out by the FTC that they, too, may be affected: "If you're a company that deals directly with the named organizations, or companies that may share data with these companies, you should take note."

> October 7, 2020

Mary J. Hildebrand CIPP/US/E speaks to SC Magazine about H&M's recent $41.5 million penalty for collecting personal data on its employees in Germany. She observes that while companies may understand that their employees have "the same rights under applicable data protection laws [such as GDPR] as revenue-generating customers, [they often lack] ... appropriate follow-through and implementation of these policies to ensure that employee privacy rights are respected." Hildebrand adds, "H&M has generated an impressive list of to-dos in an effort to compensate for egregious and illegal data collection and processing activities."

> October 7, 2020

Mary J. Hildebrand CIPP/US/E says that U.S. companies should be prepared to respond to inquiries regarding the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) and its implications for their business, including EU data transfer activities. In Corporate Counsel and Legaltech News articles discussing a Lowenstein/ACC New Jersey Cyber Day presentation featuring Hildebrand and Mark Faber (Vice President, Corporate Counsel, Cyber and Privacy Law, Prudential Financial), Hildebrand notes that since the European Union Court of Justice invalidated the EU-U.S. Privacy Shield, various EU organizations have required completion of "detailed questionnaires... about FISA..." in order to initiate or continue commercial relationships.

CIO Dive features Mary J. Hildebrand CIPP/US/E, partner and Chair of the firm's Privacy & Cybersecurity practice in an article on the privacy and security ramifications of working remotely in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic. Hildebrand notes that businesses have had to cede "control of the work environment" as everyone turned to Zoom and other online channels, exposing companies to both cybercriminals and potential privacy violations. She also observes that regulators have not been aligned on enforcement of data privacy laws in response to COVID-19, relaxing rules under HIPAA while forging ahead to enforce the California Consumer Privacy Act on July 1. Hildebrand also points to the lack of definitive federal legislation to regulate the collection and use of medical information for purposes of contact tracing. Google and Apple, creators of a framework for mobile apps that notify those at risk for COVID-19, also established parameters for digital contact tracing that include user consent and other privacy features. In a situation where Congress has so far failed to act, it's plausible, says Hildebrand, that private enterprise has taken on "a quasi-governmental role" in an effort to fill the void.

Mary J. Hildebrand, the founder and chair of the firm's Privacy & Cybersecurity team, comments on the United Kingdom's new privacy laws aimed at protecting children online in an article in Law360. The U.K.'s Information Commissioner's Office's Age Appropriate Design Code requires set stricter standards for designing, developing or offering online services that children are likely to access including turning off geolocation tracking and profiling by default, and minimizing data collection and sharing. Hildebrand observes that compliance will require "a lot of work and a lot of judgment calls to be made, sometimes in a vacuum and likely without a lot of guidance... A lot of back-and-forth between the industry and the U.K. data protection authority is likely to be required." She adds: "It will be interesting to see how the balancing test between the commercial interests of the website operator and the privacy interests of the child plays out." Mary J. Hildebrand contributes to Law360's roundup of 2020 predictions for privacy and cybersecurity law by thought leaders in the field. She says that recent data protection laws like California's Consumer Privacy Act and the EU's GDPR, where "companies' ability to use and disclose data is ... determined by the nature of the rights granted to them by the user or owner of the data," contribute to the growing trend of viewing data as a "separate asset class with a new and rapidly emerging legal framework around it." > November 12, 2019

Mary J. Hildebrand CIPP/US/E, partner and Chair of Lowenstein's Privacy & Cybersecurity group, comments in TechRepublic on the risk of ransomware to startup and midsize healthcare companies, observing that there is no "one-size-fits-all" solution. "For every organization that adamantly refuses to cooperate, there is another one that weighs the relative costs of non-compliance in terms of interrupted healthcare, costs, expenses and reputational risk, against the amount demanded, and decides to wire the funds," she says. In a second TechRepublic article on the subject, she addresses disclosure requirements under HIPAA when ePHI (electronically protected health information) is compromised. "OCR argues that ePHI was acquired during the encryption process, unless the covered entity that was attacked can prove otherwise," she says. "As any healthcare organization that has wrestled with this issue can tell you, this is a high bar to meet." Hildebrand recommends being prepared with a disaster recovery plan that "includes data back-ups, applications, infrastructure/cloud capacity, and appropriately skilled staff," and keeping messages to employees and patients "brief, factual, and timely."

Mary J. Hildebrand is featured in an article on TVNewsCheck spotlighting her presentation at the conference Media Outlook 2020, which expanded upon an article written by Hildebrand and Carly S. Penner for the Media Financial Management Association's magazine, The Financial Manager. Hildebrand explains how the United States differs from Europe and certain other countries in that it does not have a set of federal laws addressing privacy and cybersecurity generally and that federal laws here are industry-specific. Although the Federal Trade Commission is the de facto regulator of many online activities, including privacy and security standards, companies must now consider 50 different state data breach laws, plus Guam, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. California and Nevada have also adopted comprehensive data protection laws, and more states are considering legislation to do so. 4. Mary J. Hildebrand, Chair of the Privacy & Cybersecurity group, is quoted in Compliance Week in an article on how state laws are filling in the federal privacy data void and why New York State's privacy legislation is important. She says it puts "more companies at issue since it includes far more companies under its jurisdiction. State law also allows private causes of action for violating the New York Privacy Act, although New York might make the individual litigant prove damages." Hildebrand adds that "[c]ompanies seeking to comply [with the New York Privacy Act] will be confronted by complexity and entirely new (and ill-defined) concepts such as 'data fiduciary' and 'privacy risk' ... [and that] in any merger or acquisition that involves the transfer of personal data associated with a New York state resident, affirmative consent to the transfer must be obtained from each New York resident before the transfer is permitted to occur."

The Buffalo Law Journal notes Lowenstein Sandler as counsel to a company discussing its General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) compliance efforts. The article quotes Mary J.
