NJBIZ mentions Kimberly E. Lomot and Jesse S. O'Connell in an article about small businesses and nonprofits seeking help with applying for government relief in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic. Julie Murphy, executive director of Partners for Women and Justice, an organization that provides legal assistance to survivors of domestic violence, sought pro bono advice about the Paycheck Protection Program. Lomot and O'Connell answered her questions about the application and connected her to Northeast Bank, facilitating a smooth and successful loan process. The loan, most of which will be forgiven, will help keep this critical organization in operation throughout the pandemic.
